Or to our Agent, Why. B. BARILY & DO. AN IDEAL OF A MISTRESS.

The maid I love has violet eyes,
And resideal-line of red,
She wears the moonshine round her neck,
The sunshine round her head;
And the is rich in every grace,

And poor in every guile, And crowned kings might envy me The splender of her smile.

She walks the earth with such a grace,
The Hiles turn to look,
And waves rise up to catch a glance,
And stir the quiet brook;
Nor ever will thuy rest again,
But chatter as they flow,
And babble of her crimson lips,
And babble of her crimson lips,

And o'en the loaves upon the trees Are whispering tales of her, And sattle till they grow so warm, That, in the general stir, They twist them from the mother branch, And through the air they fly, Thi, fainting with the love they feel, They flutter down and die.

And what is stranger still than all
The wonders of the grace.
Her mind's the only thing to catch
The glories of her face.
Oh! she is nature's paragon—
Allianoconce of art;
And she has promised me her hand,
And given me her heart,

And when the spring again shall flush Our glorious Southern bowers, My love will wour a bride vail, A wreath of orange flowers, And so I care not if the sun Shouls founder in the seat For, oh! the star-beam of her love is light enough for me.

Safe Deliverance.

Thursday's Chicago papers give still further accounts of the terrible disaster on Lake Michigan, and among other particulars describe the manner in which some of the passengers saved their lives. One of the most interesting personal accounts of the disaster yet given, is that of Mr. H. W. Gunnison, who was eleven hours in the water. Mr. Gunnison undoubtedly owes his life to the cool deliberation and presence of mind which his narrative shows that he possessed throughout the terrible ordeal. Before the boat went down he went around among his acquaintances, shook hands and bid them acquaintances, shook hands and bid them good-bye. He advised all, and especially the military to disencumber themselves of all articles that would add to their weight, and to avoid clinging to each other when in the water. He says: "I removed every thing from my pockets of any weight that would encumber me at all, having a gold watch, keys, knife, money, &c., and threw them overboard, and had nothing on new but my pantaloons and shirt. " I then attempted to kick a door off the Captain's state-room, but, being barefooted, failed, and then went into the same state-room and found nothing but a bureau, from which I took a small drawer for my support.

for my support.
"As soon as the crash took place, there was a very general outery, especially fe-male voices. I ran and sprang as far as pos-sible into the lake, with the bureau-drawer in my hands. I was drawn down a considerable depth by the whirl occasioned by the sinking of the vessel. A moment after rising to the top, and having time to draw but a single breath, I was drawn under again, when the drawer was forced from my hands by the action of the water. On coming to the surface a second time, I seized hold of a scantling and a small box that were floating around me.

"The storm raged with great fury, with continuous thander and almost incessant lightning, and the rain pouring down in torrents. The lightning gave a sort of purple glare to the lake and the human faces that were visible around me, as the persons were struggling for life. During these gleams the faces of different ones were distinctly visible for some distance, and for a ficams the mees of different ones were dis-tinctly visible for some distance, and for a few moments were quite numerous in my immediate vicinity, but disappeared rapidly. The first scenes of strangling or drowning seemed to be followed by convulsive strug-gles and sharp shrieks, as they threw up their hands and sank."

ALONE UPON THE WATERS, Mr. Gunnison conversed with all who were near him, striving to cheer them up. For himself, he appears to have been perfectly cheerful, until his companions one by one had gone to the bottom, and he found himself on the waste of waters alone.

"I now felt a powerful feeling of loneliness, as there was no other person within hailing distance, as far as I could judge. By this time I had picked up a door and short plank, and one or two pieces of boards, which sustained me very comfortably, as the sea at this time was not very rough, compared with what it was afterward. what it was afterward. what it was afterward.

Toward daylight an old felt hat drifted along by my little raft, which I seized hold of, and soon after I got hold of a narrow strip of board, which I also retained with the idea of using them after daylight as a signal to attract attention to any affort made to rescue

"After day had fully dawned, and I discovered the great distance from shore, and the increased fury of the storm, I gave up all hopes of a rescue, and threw my hat and stick away. About this time the difficulty of helding on to the two or three pieces that of holding on to the two or three pieces that I had, was such that I gave up every support but a piece two-inch pine plank, about six feet by fourteen inches, which was my entire support for the next four or five hours. As symptoms of cramp or chills appeared, I ex-erted myself by occasional efforts at swim-ming with the help of the plank."

MAGNANIMITY IN DESPAIR. In the lonely dangers of his situation, Mr. In the lonely dangers of his situation, Mr. Gunnison appears to have made up for the want of companionship by indulging in a spirit of philosophy so cheerful as to be at times almost grotesque. At one time he says he thought of the Sons of Temperance, and concluded that were they in his situation they would not complain of any lack of cold water. At another, he called to mind the assurance policy of $5,000 upon his life, and felt deeply gratified that in case he should drown, it would provide his family with a competence; "yet," says he, "I determined to save that amount to the insurance company, and I succeeded." Some time after day-break he discovered a portion of the week break he discovered a portion of the wreck with four persons upon it.

"I worked my way up in the course of half an hour so near as to be able to hall them, and then I discovered a fifth man some few and then I discovered a fifth man some few rods beyond them, on another piece of wreck, sitting upright. The sea was so rough that these were only occasionally visible. I hailed them, and asked them how they were getting along. The German made some reply, and I then asked them if there wasn't room enough for me. They seemed to think they were loaded down enough, and thinking so myself, I hade them good-bye and told them I was going ashore. I then told the man with the straw hat that if he saw a vessel to put his hat on a pole or something and swing it. I struck off toward the shore, making considerable progress, and in the course of half an hour lost sight of them. SENSATIONS OF THE SWIMMER, AND HIS ULTI-MATE SAFETY.

"About seven or eight o'clock the wind veered around from the east to the north-east and increased to a perfect hurricane, raising the sea till it rolled mountains high. raising the sea till it rolled mountains high. I found that I could ride over these huge waves with comparative ease by keeping myself nearly in a horizontal position. That if I let my feet drop they would be thrown forward of me, and throwing me upon my back and under the plank, which occurred on two or three occasions, when I came near drowning, and only recovered my position of my breast to the plank by the most targing my breast to the plank by the most terrible exertion.

During the early part of my solitary trip I was sea-sick, and became very much exhausted from vomiting and retching. Occasionally I found an almost irrenistible tendency to go to sleep, as I had slept but little the two nights preceding. The pain in my shoulders and neck from head and shoulders above the water became intolerable, as I was not ashy for house to make any material.

papers. A traveling correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writes from this city a lengthy and interesting letter, which, tho' it contains a number of errors, is in the main quite just toward the Queen City. From the epistle we make a few extracts, supposing the reader will correct for himself the mistakes of the correspondent, who says:

It is stated that the Prince of Wales wil certainly extend his visit as far as Uncinnati, and in including this Queen City of the West in his route, his advisers certainly show their good sense, for Cincinnati is one of the American cities that will amply repay examination.

THE CITY'S APPEARANCE AND PUBLIC BUILD

Descending into town, we take one of the numerous rail-cars which traverse all parts of the city, crossing each other at right numerous rail-cars which traverse all parts of the city, crossing each other at right angles in every direction. Although of quite recent introduction, these railroads are now declared here to be as absolute necessities as in New York. A pleasant ride brings us for five cents into the business part of the city. Here we may wander at random through Third, Fourth, Fifth, Vine, Pearl and other principal thoroughfares, and find at every step something to admire.

principal thoroughfares, and find at every step something to admire.

For, strange as it may appear, Cincinnati appears to present more architectural variety than even New York. The buildings are principally of a yellowish sandstone, which wears and looks well. The new Masonic Hall, an enormous edifice, built in the style of some of the huge Florentine palaces, is of this material. This building, although as yet unfinished, is already one of the great features of the city, and it is to be regretted that its admirable architectural proportions are marred by allowing the tenants of the stores on the ground-floor to stick great staring signs of "hats and caps" on every story from the basement to the roof. The Postoffice, of the same material, and with a fine Corinthian portico, appears to advantage, and the Court-house, of Dayton limestone, resembling white marble, deserves a better position than it occupies. The principle stores are of the yellow limestone, of which inexhaustible quarries exist along the shores of the Ohio.

THE OPERA-ROUSE AND THE BOOK TRADE.

Pike's Opera-house is a building worth observing, though exteriorly it is not superior to many of the rows of stores in various streets of the city. The lower part is lot out for various warchouses, one portion being occupied by the well-known booksellers, Rickey, Mallory & Webb, who have here an establishment which, for extent, efegance and convenience, is scarcely excelled even in the New York trade. Moore, Wilstach & Keys, a publishing firm whose name is familiar in the East, also occupy a very elegant store not far distant, and, indeed, the book business appears to be one of the most prosperous in Cincinnati. The interior of the Opera-house, though estimated to hold 5,000 people, does not appear spacious to one accustomed to the vast expanse of the New York Academy of Music. It is very richly—almost gaudily decorated, and in the daytime is well lighted from the glazed dome, thus rendering it equally available for day and night entertainments. The parquette is provided with cool, cane-seated chairs, a decided improvement on the velvet-cushioned seats so much in vogue. Mr. Pike, the nominal but not exclusive proprieter. THE OPERA-HOUSE AND THE BOOK TRADE. oned seats so much in vogue. Mr. Pike, the nominal, but not exclusive proprietor, has one of the stage boxes for his own use.

EMITH & NIXON'S HALL. Smith & Nixon's Music Hall, a plain, wellsentiated and comfortable saloon, seating some 2,000 people, is highly spoken of by musicians for its acoustic properties, and most of the celebrated singers or players who have made the four of the United States have appeared there.

Cincinnati has some admirable news-papers, the reporters of which are famous for their ability to dress up a trifling item into a fact apparently of the most colossal im-portance. A suicide is the sequel for a homily on the uncertainty of life, and a fire suggests touching essays upon the dangerous proclivities of the devouring element. At present the State Fairs, and the relative size and probable development of over-fed cows and mammoth pumpkins, attract the earnest attention of these imaginative writers.

A Postoffice Mistare—A Man With an Unfortunate Name.—A man lately went to the Post-office, and putting his mouth up to the delivery-box, cried out: "Louder!" The clerk, supposing the man to be deaf, and that he was making a request for him to speak louder so that he could hear, asked him in a very loud tone the name of the per-him in a very loud tone the name of the person for whom he wanted the letter.

"Louder!" crisd the man.

"What name?" yelled the clerk.

"Louder!" again bawled the man, who supposed the clerk to be deaf.

The clerk took a long breath, and with all his might again bawled out into the man's face the same question: "What name?"

This was done in so loud a tone that the echo seemed to return from the far-off hills. echo seemed to return from the far-off hills.

The man started back in alarm, shouting to the very top of his lungs: "Londer, sir, Louder! I told you Louder! My name is nothing else."

"Oh! ab! oh! ab!" said the clerk, "your name is Louder, eh? Didn't think of that; here's your letter, Mr. Louder, here's your Fortune Lost and Regained.—A gentleman residing in Milwaukie, while passing up West Water-street the other day, picked up a basket, which, on examination, was found to contain 711 American eagles, amount-ing in value to $7,110. Leaving word at a store near by that he had found a treasure, and that he would return shortly, he went to his office. On his return to the place where he had found the precious nest, he was met by an anxious group of German emigrants who claimed the treasure. It ap-pears that a woman belonging to the com-pany, who had charge of the basket, had set it down for a moment to attend to something else. This through, forgetting the basket, she went on her way, unconscious of her loss. The basket being missed soon after, the whole party returned in precipitate baste, quite overcome by the loss they had sustained. They were, of course, overloyed at the recovery of the money, and were most extravagant in their demonstrations of delight and gratitude. ATTACE UPON AN ARMY OF RATTLESNAMES. These venomous reptiles have been unusually numerous the past summer on the mountains in Allegheny County, Maryland. The Frontburg Gazette Bays:

Frostburg Gazette mays:

Mr. Jacob Loar, residing on the Western slope of Dan's Mountain, and four miles from Frostburg, with the aid of the members of his family, made an attack upon an army of rattlesnakes, consisting of not less than seventy-three—some of them being over five teet in length—on Sunday last, with stones, and they were so completely victorious that not one of the reptiles escaped to tell the story of their fate to the perhaps few that remained in the den.
